

BellSouth should not be allowed to use their size and connections in Washington to create a broadband service monopoly. Large companies like BellSouth cannot compete with local providers from a service standpoint. The best case advantage would simply be temporary price reductions with much poorer service. As consumers, we have learned by experience that deregulation only benefits giant corporations with the burden for their and Washington's failures heaped upon us.